

By Fraser Beattie

Published:
08 September 2015
12:10pm

Category:
Bio-tech
Community & Arts
Health

0 Comments

The new Perth Children's Hospital is due to open in the first half of next year. Photo: Attila Csaszar

Compumedics to fitout Perth Children's Hospital

Medical device company Compumedics has won a contract to fitout the neurology department at the new $1.2 billion Perth Children's Hospital.

Victoria-based Compumedics, which develops diagnostics technology for sleep, brain and ultrasonic blood-flow monitoring applications, will install its technology at the new hospital, which is currently under construction in on the QEII Medical Centre in Nedlands, in a deal worth $600,000.

"Compumedics has spent more than a decade building an innovative and comprehensive range of neurological diagnostic and monitoring products to enable the company to expand into the premier market," chief executive David Burton said.

"With this order we continue to build credibility and market acceptance of our product capability, which can be used to push into new geographic markets around the world.

"Compumedics is pleased that the new contract builds strongly on a long and very successful history as market leaders in Australia for both neurology and sleep diagnostic and monitoring solutions," he said.

When completed, the new hospital will replace Princess Margaret Hospital as the state's dedicated children's hospital.

It is due to be completed later this year, with doors opening in the first half of next year.

Shares in Compumedics were 11.9 per cent higher to 23.5 cents at midday.

<https://www.businessnews.com.au/article/Compumedics-to-fitout-Perth-Childrens-Hospital>