

4 shares under $1 with huge potential

By Christopher Georges - October 4, 2016

Investors often associate shares trading under $1 as being high-risk, high-reward opportunities that are best left to speculative traders.

While there is a significant part of the micro-cap market that meets the criteria (think gold exploration and start-up biotechnology companies), investors shouldn't be too quick to write off the sector altogether. In fact, some of the best opportunities for growth investors reside in this part of the market.

With that in mind, here are [four] fast-growing companies that growth investors could consider with further research:

Compumedics Limited (ASX: CMP) – share price 61 cents

Trading at 61 cents per share, Compumedics is a developer and manufacturer of medical devices with a market capitalisation of around $105 million. The company is already the market leader in supplying sleep diagnostic devices in Australia, Japan and China and is now focusing more of its attention to growing its market share in the very lucrative US and German markets. Impressively, Compumedics is still being led by its founder after 26 years and I believe this bodes well for prospective investors.

<http://www.fool.com.au/2016/10/04/4-shares-under-1-with-huge-potential/>