

Knosys cashed up for ASX listing

08 September 2015 By Peter Dinham

Knowledge management software provider, Knosys, has raised $4 million in capital in preparation for listing on the ASX on Wednesday.

The capital raising, through the issue of 20 million ordinary shares at 20 cents per share, values the company (ASX: KNO) at $15 million on listing (9 September).

Knosys founder and executive director, Gavin Champion, said "with a fully functional platform, having operational clients including one of the top four large banks, and channel partners including Singtel-Optus and Go Cloud IT Asia, Knosys expects to successfully build upon the results achieved to date."

Champion says the Knosys platform has the ability to access knowledge from multiple disparate platforms without disruption, and by indexing, linking, integrating applications and providing the information in a context relevant to the user's role within the organisation, provides a user centric/multi-device consolidated view of an organisation's information sources.

Knosys delivers sales, productivity and satisfaction improvements across large or small organisations by providing a single source of accessible information across the organisation's existing technology platforms - delivered in the cloud or on premise as a 'Software as a Service' (SaaS) operating expenditure (Opex) model.

Champion said Knosys had strengthened its board with the appointment of Alan

Stockdale – a former Victorian government treasurer – as chairman, and has appointed Ashley Gall, former NTT Communications, Southern Cross Computer Systems and HP manager, as CEO, and Stephen Kerr as CFO.
